

Guidelines

Any submission of an article to the AIJA for publication in the magazine and website entails the transfer, free of charge, of its reproduction rights to the AIJA. Before publication, all authors must return the attached form, duly completed.

All articles are submitted to the AIJA Editorial Board, which expressly reserves the right:

- To make corrections to the form of the article,
- to publish only part of the article, with the prior approval of the author,
- to postpone its publication to a later issue,
- not to publish it,
- to remove endnotes over 5,
- to invite another AIJA member to announce the article on short video to be published on AIJA social media.

You can provide articles or papers you have already published in other publications, magazines or company websites provided you do not have any exclusivity contract signed with them. In the same way, if you publish your article in the AIJA publication it will not constitute an exclusive license or assignment of IP rights.

The Articles can be in relation to:

- New legislation in your country.
- Recent decisions.
- In-depth analysis of a topic of your choice.
- A speech you will give or have given at an AIJA Seminar, Half-Year Conference or Annual Congress. Use the preparation of your speech to put together an article to be published.
- Collaborative articles involving members from different jurisdictions, focusing on topics with broad interest. Commission Officers can create a Q&A format on a specific topic, with members from various jurisdictions contributing responses, coordinated into a cohesive article with an introductory overview (see example here).

The Article will be published in the new AIJA website dedicated to the Articles and will be published in the quarterly Publication.

The Articles will be divided by area of interest (following the AIJA commission structure) and inside divided by countries. The Articles will be accompanied by the name of the Author. The Law Firm name will not be included. The picture of the Author will be included in the Publication website.

By submitting your Article you also declare your work does not breach any third parties ip rights and it is your own work.

AIJA assumes no responsibility or liability for the content or legal status of any material submitted or published in the AIJA Journal. By submitting an article, the author represents and warrants that they hold all necessary rights and permissions to publish the material, including, without limitation, compliance with any exclusivity or confidentiality obligations. AIJA disclaims any liability arising from an author's failure to disclose such obligations or to secure requisite permissions, and the author agrees to indemnify and hold AIJA harmless from any claims, losses, or damages related to such matters.

Some of the published works will be selected by the Editorial Board to be published in Lexology. Before the submission of the work to Lexology approval of the author will be requested.
